Political Science is the study of power; it is about who gets what, where, when, why, and how resources are allocated. The courses in this discipline convey the principles, methods, and theories that are necessary for a better understanding of the interactions of each group involved. Although many students earn their Bachelor’s degrees and go on to graduate school many degree recipients enter the work force immediately upon graduating.